Waste Management collected $11.2 billion in 2009. So why is this garbage giant trying to destroy good jobs in our community and leave you knee-high in trash?

Everyday sanitation workers place their bodies in harm's way to protect the public health. Sanitation work is the fifth most dangerous job in America—more dangerous than police or firefighters.

But rather than take care of their employees, Waste Management wants to lockout or force a strike on sanitation workers in our community.

These are workers who grew up here and are trying to raise their families, pay their taxes and put food on their tables.

When Waste Management locked out its own workers in Oakland, California many residents did not get their trash pick up service for one month.

Protect your family, protect your neighborhood, and stand with local workers.
